A Feeling of Triumph.

As the delegates left for their homes this evening, there was a feeling of triumph among them. During the foremon they had been downcast with the impression that Mr. Stuart would not accept the nomination, and aside from him there appeared to be no definite conclusion about a candidate, although several men were prominently mentioned, any one of whom would have made a good race.

The delegates went to their homes feeling that with Mr. Stuart as their nominee they have a chance to win such as has not been presented in the district since the days when Judge William F. Phes led the narty to vie-such as has not been presented in the district since the days when Judge William F. Rhea led the party to victory repeatedly. A spirit of determination seemed to possess every member of the large delegation of earnest Democrats who composed the convention.

The Convention Meets.

The convention met at noon, with upwards of a thousand people in the theatre, including large delegations from all the counties except Bland, Buchanan and Dickenson, each of these being represented by a small delegation. A band discoursed stirring music as the delegates assembled in the Harmeling Theatre. The honeful music as the delegates assembled in the Harmeling Theatre. The hopeful feeling which had characterized the delegates last night as they awaited about the hotel lobbies the coming of Henry C. Stuart, had given away to a feeling of disappointment, for as the result of repeated conferences with Mr. Stuart in the late hours of the night he persisted in the view that he could not think of accepting the nomination under existing circumstances. He so announced in the morning paper, in response to the questioning of a reporter.

His feeling was communicated to R. Tate Irvine, chairman of the convention, and Mr. Irvine injunediately, following the report of the committee on resolutions, proceeded to place him in nomination.

The convention organized by the election of R. Tate Irvine as temporary chairman, and Frank Wysor, of Pulaski, as temporary chairman.

The temporary organization was made permanent, and this was followed by the naming of the only committee deemed necessary—that on resolutions. This committee consisted of one member from each county, the delegation from each county making its own, choice.

DELINQUENT LOTS SOLD

Land-Grabbers Take Long Chances on Their Being Redeemed.

The annual sale of delinquent land took place at the City Hall yesterday, a number of well known "land-grabbers" being in evidence. As usual the parcels went for much below their assessed value, one speculator purchasing as many as fifty Richmond lots for not more than $100. This purchaser was therefore, Waldrop, who bought in delinquent lots in Clay and Henry Wards. C. M. Bradley hid in twelve parcels in the East End for about $10. Mrs. Stokes, of $150 Winder Rirest, bid in a lot for $6, and J. Griffiths, colored, secured several lots for less than $25.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Washington, D. C., March 1.-The Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Washington, D. C., March 1.—The argument in the Parsons-Saunders contest case will begin to-morrow before the full committee. Judge Saunders will represent himself, and former Governor A. J. Montague, J. H. Carrico and former Senator J. M. Thurston will argue for Mr. Parsons. Mr. Montague, It was stated in press reports last year, was to take part in the controversy, but up to this time he has not put in his appearance. He was engaged to make a legal argument on the constitutionality of the case, and will arrive here to-night.

This is the last phase of the controversy. A verdict should be reached soon.
